BYRD'S SOUTH POLE ADVENTURE

In a scientifically expressed discussion of the plans, just disclosed in detail, for his airplane attempt to reach the South Pole, Commander Richard E. Byrd says it is "problematical at present" whether it will be possible actually to land at the Pole.

The commander, whose party will leave New York next August or September, to spend three to fifteen months in the to have a duplex or triplex apartfrozen south, explains the Pole is on a plateau more than 10,000 feet high and "it will not be easy to land there." This Fifth he points out, is because the surface may not be suitable; it will be very cold, and, at such a height, the landing speed of a heavily loaded plane is much greater than at sea level, due to the lack of density in the air.

Then, still in the unembellished language of a scientist thinking out an abstract problem, Commander Byrd adds.

"We will not land unless it is certain that we will be able to do so safely, except, of course in case of emergency due to a sudden storm, when we will come down anyway."

Doesn't that single sentence convey the character of the aliant flier, who already has negotiated unknown and perilous air currents on his trip to the North Pole and back? Doesn't it give a new insight into the spirit and courage of all the osition. I have been in high-toned twentieth century pioneers of the air-the Lindberghs, the knives, forks and spoons out on Chamberlins and the other brave men, who are charting the air each side of your plate that it was a puzzle to figure them out, and maps of the world, for the benefit of the rest of us?

"In case of emergency . . . we will come down anyway." What a wealth of super-courage Commander Byrd unvittingly reveals in those words! He and his trained band will use every bit of available scientific knowledge and every known scientific device to remain in the air away from unnecessary perils of which they have such certain knowledge, president on one simple platform. but then,-if anything happens,-they "will come down any-

"In case of emergency . . . we will come down anyway." What a wealth of super-courage Commander Byrd unwittingly reveals in those words! NEW PUPILS BE GRADED? -- Several methods are used in different schools. But no single factor can be considered alone sufficient. Age (chronological and physical), public school grade, grading in the church school previously attended, social and economic interests, and especially religious development understanding (depending and largely upon home training and environment)-all these factors should be recorded when the pupil is enrolled, and the pupil should then be placed in the class considered most suitable by the enrollment secretary.

2—HOW CAN WE GET THE CHILDREN IN THE SUNDAY SCHOOL TO STAY FOR CHURCH SERVICE?-Mary Moxcey in the Sunday School Journal says, "The first essential is to make it profitable for the children to stay. These difficulties may be overcome by their more thorough preparation for church membership, the class meeting weekly for at least six months before their reception into membership, to learn the purpose, elements and methods of worship; and by the pastor's co-operating with the teachers to make the sucand wicked charges against Jesus; standing traits of Jesus as taught cessive service intelligible to the children who do attend.
